Laurel Braitman got her lessons closer to home - by watching her dog. Oliver snapped at flies that only he could see, suffered from debilitating separation anxiety, was prone to aggression, and may even have attempted suicide. Braitman's experiences with Oliver made her acknowledge a startling connection: non-human animals can lose their minds.

Animal Madness is an amazing book with a scientific and psychological flare as it relates to animals of all kinds. This is not the book for you if you like reading cliff notes or think it is a "how to" dog-type book. It will captivate most with the expanse of research sited and interesting global stories of a myriad of animals.

When he chewed through a screen, leapt from a fourth-story window, and--incredibly--survived, Braitman became intent on finding a way to help him. In Animal Madness, she shares how "one anxious dog brought me the entire animal kingdom." Elements of memoir make the story more poignant, but it's primarily a lively, deeply researched history and an unflinching look at the trauma of modern-day captivity in medical labs and faux-natural zoos.
