While Sallust can easily come off as very liberal, and his depiction of Catiline can come off as somewhat stolen (from Cicero), The Jugurthine War ought to catch the eye of every student of Winston Churchill because it is not difficult to envision Churchill, during his Wilderness years, listening to radio accounts of Hitler, reading The Jugurthine War, and seeing clear parallels between Jugurtha and the notoriously evil usurper in Germany.

Sallust (86– c. 35 bc) is the earliest Roman historian of whom complete works survive, a senator of the Roman Republic and younger contemporary of Cicero, Pompey and Julius Caesar. His Catiline’s War tells of the conspiracy in 63 bc led by L. Sergius Catilina, who plotted to assassinate numerous senators and take control of the government, but was thwarted by Cicero.

Catiline's War, The Jugurthine War, Histories

The longer commentary, The Jugurthine War, tells the story of Jugurthine, king of the Numidians. He defied Rome, bribed senators and proceeded to wage a long running guerrilla war against the Roman army. The first two commentaries (Sallust and Jugurthine) have a subtext: driving ambition can very easily lead to disaster.

Catiline's Conspiracy was okay but it was The Jugurthine War that was most interesting, it's a classical war campaign narrative. There's war elephants and night battles and treks through the desert to remote towns. Interesting to read about ancient North Africa too, which you never hear about, aside from Carthage.

The Jugurthine War . 1 . Without reason do mankind complain of their nature, on the ground that it is weak and of short duration and ruled rather by chance than by virtue. 2. For reflection would show on the contrary that nothing is greater or more excellent, and that nature has more often found diligence lacking in men than strength or endurance in

THE WAR WITH CATILINE. 1. All humans who are keen to surpass other animals had best strive with all their might not to pass through life without notice, like cattle, which nature has fashioned bent over and subservient to their stomachs. All our power, however, is situated in mind and body; we employ the mind to rule, the body rather to serve; the one we have in common with the gods, the other with beasts.

Sallust's vivid account of Roman public life shows a Republic in decline, prey to moral corruption and internal strife. In The Jugurthine War he describes Rome's fight in Africa against the king of the Numidians from 111 to 105 bc, and provides a damning picture of the Roman aristocracy. Also included in this volume are the major surviving extracts from Sallust's now fragmentary Histories, depicting Rome after the death of the dictator Sulla.
