The Changing Conversations Story. Jacky holds the belief that every change in an organisation starts with a conversation. Some conversations can go in circles but the ones that develop into thinking about the future are those that pay the best dividends. Listening is key to the success of changing conversations.

Changing Conversations | Helping your organisation ...

I'm currently reading Patricia Shaw's "Changing Conversations in Organizations" after John Moore recommended it to me. I'm finding it challenging and great – in particular for the emphasis it puts on the non-formal networks in organisations. It ties in with a conversation I had last week with Flemming Madsen of Onalytica. He quoted a figure [...]

Changing Conversations in Organizations - Narrate

Involve people in an organisation-wide conversation. Changing a culture requires a new model of involvement and engagement. This is best framed around a wide-ranging, ongoing conversation about how the organisation can achieve its corporate objectives. Start with the very senior people and progressively open up the conversation.
