Norman with an all-African-American cast. This six-reel film, made by Norman Studios in Jacksonville, Florida, utilized a mix of professionals such as leads Laurence Criner and Kathryn Boyd, and non-professional actors.[1][. N 1] Films such as The Flying Ace, that used an all-African-American cast and were shown specifically to African-American audiences, were known as "race films".

Amelia Earhart by Angela Bull is the biography of the famous American flying ace, who became the first woman to fly the Atlantic. With her husband (also her publicist), she plotted an even bigger hat -- to fly round the world. She set off, completed several legs, and then disappeared. The search that followed revealed nothing.

A flying ace, fighter ace or air ace is a military aviator credited with shooting down five or more enemy aircraft during aerial combat. The actual number of aerial victories required to officially qualify as an ace has varied, but is usually considered to be five or more. The concept of the "ace" emerged in 1915 during World War I, at the same time as aerial dogfighting. It was a propaganda term intended to provide the home front with a cult of the hero in what was otherwise a war of attrition.

Bill Reed had it all - brains, looks, athleticism, courage and a talent for leadership. After a challenging childhood in Depression-era Iowa, Reed joined the US Army Air Corps, but the outbreak of World War II saw him give up his commission. Instead, he travelled to China to fly for the American Volunteer Group - the legendary Flying Tigers.

Flying ace Douglas Bader flew his last sortie from RAF Westhampnett (now Goodwood Aerodrome) on 9 August, 1941. Having joined the RAF in 1930 at the age of 20, he tragically crashed his Bristol Bulldog fighter a year later which led to the eventual amputation of both of his legs in 1933. He was discharged from the RAF, but was determined to keep flying.

Readers familiar with Molesworth's other books will find Flying Tiger Ace a much more intimate view of the war, immersing the reader in Reed's heartfelt and detailed letters to his mother, intermittent journal entries, and combat reports. In most unit histories, characters like Reed come across as two-dimensional patriotic cutouts.
