Heritage Malta Historic Wreck Sites. For a number of years, systematic underwater archaeological research has been conducted off the coasts of the Maltese Islands. In the course of this long-term project, important deposits of underwater cultural heritage have been discovered, mapped and studied. Such historical wreck sites range from a 2,700 year-old Phoenician shipwreck, the oldest in the central Mediterranean, to WWI battleships, and dozens of aircraft crash sites.

A 3D photogrammetric model of the almost intact wreckage of the Ju88 (Malta Underwater Cultural Heritage Unit) Throughout the Second World War, Malta was the only Allied base between Gibraltar and Alexandria, and with the arrival of the German Luftwaffe in Sicily, Malta became a prime target for Axis bombings. German aircraft conducted a continuous stream of air raids over the island, with an average of 200 bombers dropping their payloads every day, the vast majority of which were Ju88's.
