Abstract. The great depression of the inter-war years was the most profound shock ever to strike the world economy, and is widely held to have led directly to the collapse of parliamentary democracy in many countries. This study of Greece in the period between the two world wars, however, demonstrates that there was no simple correlation between economic and political crisis.

Greece - Greece - Greek history since World War I: The dynamism and sense of national unity that had characterized the early Venizelos years gave way to rancour and vengefulness that were to poison the country's political life throughout World War I and the interwar period. Greece was torn apart by the "National Schism," a division of the country into irreconcilable camps supporting either King Constantine I or his prime minister, Venizelos.

It presents 12 notable architects of the interwar period, and corrects a misunderstanding. Greek architecture did not move automatically and in a coordinated fashion from neoclassicism to modernism. Between the two was a transitional phase in 20th century Greek architecture, one that was much more exciting in many ways.

Hopes in Geneva. Woodrow Wilson's vision of a general association of nations took shape in the League of Nations, founded in 1920. Its basic constitution was the Covenant—Wilson's word, chosen, as he said, "because I am an old Presbyterian." The Covenant was embodied in the Versailles and other peace treaties. The League's institutions, established in Geneva, consisted of an Assembly, in which each member country had a veto and an equal vote, and a smaller ...

Both parties viewed the other's actions during the First World War as politically illegitimate and treasonous. This enmity inevitably spread throughout Greek society, creating a deep rift that contributed decisively to the failed Asia Minor campaign and resulted in much social unrest in the inter war years. The heavy equipment and weaponry of the Hellenic Army is of mostly foreign manufacture, from American, British, French, German and other suppliers. Exception are the Kentaurus and the Leonidas armored fighting vehicles which are built in Greece by the Hellenic Vehicle Industry.. Equipment runs the gamut from state-of-the-art to obsolescent Cold War inventories; the latter are gradually being ...
