A Requiem for Homo Sapiens is a trilogy of science fiction novels by American writer David Zindell, made up of The Broken God (1992), The Wild (1995), and War in Heaven (1998). This trilogy is a sequel to the standalone novel Neverness (1988). The series has been described as containing "the most striking writing, vivid spectacles, memorable characters, and insightful presentations of philosophy and religion seen in SF for many a year." Some reviewers have commented on similarities between the s

Neverness is a science fiction novel by American writer David Zindell, published in 1988; it is based on a 1985 novelette entitled "Shanidar". Neverness concerns a far-future world where mathematicians have become a kind of caste or religious order, because of their abilities to do the calculations needed for space travel. It follows the deeds of Mallory Ringess, as he discovers secrets and ...

This is the last in the Requiem for Homo Sapiens trilogy, following The Broken God and The Wild. Danlo Ringess has returned to Thiells from his successful explorations of the Wild, bringing the bad news that the Iviomils, the fundamentalist wing of the Edeic Architect religion, have stolen a spaceship and the device that makes a star go supernova, and with it are likely to attack Neverness.

Neverness (A Requiem for Homo Sapiens, #0) by David

Zindell While I prefer the Requiem for Homo Sapiens (the trilogy that follows this), Neverness is an excellent introduction into the world of Icefall and the Order of Mystic Mathematicians and Other Seekers of the Ineffable Flame.
