Snow flew up in a cloudy mist as it touched down about a hundred yards away. “No.” She leaned against the glass and willed it to go away. But the sound of the spinning blades continued and a door opened, spilling out two men and a woman. They knelt and stumbled into the snow. Maggie ran back to the bedroom.

She tried to push herself up, but she sank in the snow. She wasn’t going to make it, but she couldn’t survive Maggie either. “Oh, God.” She rolled onto her back and closed her eyes as the snow assaulted her. She let it fall. Just let it fall, fall, fall. She was too weak to make it back. Too weak to go on. Maggie. She curled onto her side.
