~~February 28, 2012, by Warren Singh-Barilett. Japanese architect Tadao Ando makes masterpieces in concrete. Here, Official Bespoke takes a look at his recently completed Pringiers House in Sri Lanka. I remember the first time I saw a piece of Tadao Ando. I was visiting a friend in one of the lower-rise, village-like neighbourhoods of central Tokyo. Fresh off the boat, I ' d been given what seemed like impossibly basic directions, the last of which was to look for the " beautiful, pale grey, ...~~

~~This adventurous new house in Sri Lanka intelligently and dramatically exploits its stunning clifftop setting. Photography by Edmund Sumner Recent works by Japanese architect Tadao Ando featured in the AR showed something of a departure from his signature use of exposed concrete, with two projects of irregular form, cloaked in sheet steel (AR November 2005 and August 2007).~~

~~Tadao Ando's Sri Lanka house, by Edmund Sumner Sumner says he shot the Sri Lankan house, built onto cliffs overlooking the island ' s Mirissa beach, in early 2011. " The owners were a charismatic Belgium couple, who had been living in Sri Lanka for many years, " he recalls, adding that the peerless position and building design was complemented by an " exemplary " contemporary art and furniture collection.~~

~~Azuma House in Sumiyoshi, also known as Row House, was one of the first works of self-taught architect, Tadao Ando. He divided in three a space devoted to daily life, composed of an austere geometry, with the insertion of an abstract space dedicated to the play of wind and light. His objective, he says, was to challenge the inertia that has invaded our everyday lives.~~

~~Tadao Ando's design for Koshino House includes two parallel rectangular concrete elements. The forms are partially buried in the sloping ground of a national park and become a compositional addition to the landscape. Positioned with care not to disturb the pre-existing trees on the site, the structure responds to the adjacent ecosystem while the concrete forms turn to a more general nature through a playful manipulation of light.~~

~~Sri Lanka, private eden. These houses look extraordinary, immersed in tropical vegetation, built on a rocky promontory. Both are in the southern part of the island. They overlook the Indian Ocean and the bay of Weligama with its beaches. In a landscape of palm trees and wild foliage, they are like powerful monoliths, made lighter by basic, long, narrow geometric design.~~
