In, "The Cavalry that broke Napoleon", Mr. Goldsbrough has managed to tread the insanely thin line between the presentation of a large amount of information and an entertaining read. Using every tool at the military historian's fingers, he gives the reader a look into the world of the cavalryman, with all its hierarchies, traditions and discipline, before moving into the famous battle of Waterloo itself.

The Cavalry that Broke Napoleon: The King's Dragoon Guards at Waterloo by Richard Goldsbrough. On 18 June 1815, Napoleon and Wellington took to the fields of Waterloo for one final, decisive battle - a battle that would put an end to over two decades of warfare and determine the fate of Europe. Yet, little is known about the significant contribution made by the 1st or King's Dragoon Guards who, ultimately, helped deny Napoleon victory.

By Richard Goldsbrough... "The best-selling author of The Battle, Alessandro Barbero, was asked which action saved Wellington at Waterloo prior to the arrival of the Prussians. He replied: 'If I should indulge in that game, I'd say the cavalry charge which effectively broke d'Erlon's attack.'. In terms of regiments the greatest contributor to that charge, made by the British heavy cavalry, was the King's Dragoon Guards (KDG), which fielded nearly half of the Household Brigade's sabres.

However, when it comes to cavalry actions, the 1939 Campaign does have the unique distinction of witnessing what is often cited as the last ever cavalry-on-cavalry engagement in military history. At the outset of the Second World War, Poland's 11 Cavalry Brigades were the well-trained, well-led, highly motivated elite of its armed forces; they quickly proved their worth on the battlefield.
