In English law, secret trusts are a class of trust defined as an arrangement between a testator and a trustee, made to come into force after death, that aims to benefit a person without having been written in a formal will. The property is given to the trustee in the will, and he would then be expected to pass it on to the real beneficiary. For these to be valid, the person seeking to enforce the trust must prove that the testator intended to form a trust, that this intention was communicated to

However, the law of trusts recognises a proportionate right in each investor provided that the entire fund is segregated from other entire funds. There is no particular problem with this in common sense terms. What is interesting, however, is that the law of property is prepared to elide the concepts of separate property and of value.
