Our talented women. A 2013 research study showed that “Women are less likely than men to be associated with leadership, and the awareness of this stereotype may undermine women's performance in leadership tasks. One way to circumvent this stereotype threat is to expose women to highly successful female role models.”

‘The Most Impressively Talented Women’

Talented women are able to create an environment in which they can rely on their subordinates to handle projects. The subordinates are informed of the work that is to be done. They allow others to lead, thereby helping them to improve their leadership skills. What makes great managers stand out from good ones is the fact that they are experts in the art of delegating tasks to their juniors.
