Winner's curse - Wikipedia

We call it the “winner’s curse”... It’s a simple idea. When you’re the highest bidder, you almost always overpay. Winning means you had the most optimistic view of an asset’s value. That is, unless you know something that everyone else is missing. It shows up in online auctions on eBay. It happens in bidding wars for paintings and ...

WINNER’S CURSE

The winner's curse can be experienced by both financial or strategic buyers. Each potential buyer in an auction will individually estimate the value of the firm before bidding. Buyers, in effect, are pre-paying for uncertain future revenues and cost synergies. In an urge to beat competing bidders, the winners tend to overpay.
