When the rafters and the frame of the roof have been fitted or, if you are simply replacing the tiles or slates, when they and the batten underneath have been removed, the next stage is to lay the roofing felt or roofing underlay. This is to ensure that the roof is ready for the battens to be fitted, which will secure the tiles or slate in place.

On the outside of the building, high up under the eaves, house martins may build their mud nests. They will not, however, enter your roof space. House martins are 15 cm (6 inches) long, blue-black with white underside and square white patch on back at the base of the tail. Fully protected at all times.
